Milwaukee, Wis., May 13.—"Did this woman, as far as you know, wear male attire for immoral purposes? Did you ever see her do anything vulgar?" asked the judge in the case of "disorderly conduct" brought against Cora Anderson, who, until last week, as Ralph Kerwinleo, had worn men's clothes and posed as a man for thirteen years.

"No."

"While in male attire how did she act?" the judge continued.

"Like a PERFECT GENTLEMAN," was the policeman's answer, much to the amusement of the spectators who filled the police courtroom in Milwaukee.

And this is the verdict of almost every third man in the city who knew Ralph Kerwinleo well and never for a moment suspected that "he" was a woman.

After hearing many more witnesses Judge Page could not find the charge sustained and this "girl-man" who sat so composedly through the trial was allowed to go free with the command that she should resume her woman's dress in the future.

This is the end of one of the strangest cases of double life that has ever been written.

Thirteen years ago two girls who had studied to be nurses at the Provident Hospital, Chicago, found out
